THE POST BUILDING

CONNECTING US IN ST. LOUIS SINCE 1930

UNFORGETTABLE MOMENTS ARE MADE HERE.

THE POST BUILDING at 900 N Tucker has been a vital hub for informing and connecting St. Louis to the world since its construction in 1930. Originally built for The Globe-Democrat newspaper, the building changed hands in 1959 when Joseph Pulitzer's St. Louis Post-Dispatch purchased the building and its printing presses. Among locals the building became known as "the Post-Dispatch building," serving as the newspaper's headquarters until 2019.

In 2020, The Post underwent a transformative renovation led by StarWood Group in partnership with Trivers architects, CannonDesign and Tarlton as General Contractor. The result is a stunning adaptive reuse effort that blends modern design, historic urban fabric and a community-focused mission to create a remarkable new space in Downtown North Insight District.

The Post now affords 5 dynamic event spaces: The Press Hall for large events up to 600 people; Offset Bar, a intimate bar and lounge; The Press Hall Patio for outdoor events; Paperboat Gallery, an art space; and The Council Room for seminars or workshops up to 30 people. Each space combines The Post's history with modern needs for any event.
